

I absolutely support Acting Governor Codey in defending New Jersey's Do Not Call list. Vendors I have dealt with do ask for your email once you are an established customer and most often ask you if you wish to be solicited in the future. If I said no the first time, then I don't want to be bothered on my personal (PRIVATE!) phone. Personally, I have dropped my home phone completely because I'm not going to pay those rates when most of the calls I received were from telemarketers. Silence is bliss. I would recommend this to anyone. It is so much cheaper to use my work or my cell phone.

Now in the same vein, please let's have a law to stop the banks from sending me credit card mail which I have to carefully shred because of the prevalence of identify theft.
